

Marsha Ridley

Marsha Ridley brings 40+ years of expertise in public safety and community engagement. As one of DC Government's first female building engineers, her exceptional work performance evolved into promotion as a property manager for government professional buildings.

This leadership role included ensuring the safety and wellbeing of both the building and personnel, procuring and managing private security, and working collaboratively with local law enforcement. Marsha was then tapped to manage daily operations for all of the nation's capitol's mixed-income communities-remediating a wide range of concerns from tenants varying in generational, educational, ethnic, sexual orientation, and income backgrounds. She also established a multi-service center facility to provide on-sight academic and social services to D.C. Housing Authority residents.

For 20+ years, Marsha has been an active member of the Mitchellville Foxlake Community Association, where she resides, and engages in civic activities throughout Prince George's County. Throughout the Covid-pandemic, Marsha's commitment to her Prince George's County neighbors remained.
